

Affiliating with APRIES

APRIES continues to seek out faculty and researchers whose work contributes to the grand challenge of human trafficking in Africa, while maintaining meaningful affiliations with the excellent faculty already engaged with applied research. Specifically, we seek people who are currently conducting research in Africa in the areas of trafficking, child labor, poverty, and/or gender-based issues and international development.

Please visit <http://www.apries.uga.edu> to discover more about the individual interests of APRIES members. The benefits of affiliating with APRIES are:

- Opportunities for interdisciplinary engagement in human trafficking and child labor research
- A broad academic arena for training the next generation of human trafficking researchers and professionals
- Support to recruit excellent graduate students through the APRIES pre-doctoral Graduate Fellowship program
- Student support through research and travel funds
- A mentoring program for postdoctoral researchers
- Staff coordination and accounting assistance for planning and implementing large, multi-investigator research and graduate training proposals

All tenured, tenure-track, adjunct, and research faculty at the University of Georgia, the University of Liverpool, and Makerere University are eligible for affiliation with APRIES.

Faculty in other institutions of higher learning and who are currently conducting research in the areas of trafficking, child labor, poverty, and/or gender-based issues and development in Sub-Saharan Africa are also eligible to apply for affiliation.

Applications for affiliation will be reviewed and voted upon by the APRIES leadership team.

To apply, please submit the following to apries-web@uga.edu:

- Your current curriculum vitae
- A brief statement explaining how your academic research relates to the APRIES' mission and foci: poverty in Africa, child labor, and human trafficking. Please state the relevance of your work to the interdisciplinary community as well as what you hope to bring to, and gain from, affiliation with APRIES
- 2-3 related published works that are related to the mission and work of APRIES
